The carbon monoxide incident that killed a Jefferson City man over the weekend has now also claimed the life of his wife.

The Jefferson City Police Department announced Monday afternoon Lisa Feltrop, 44, died after fighting to recover over the weekend.

Her husband, Troy, 51, was found dead Saturday morning in their home on Sandra Lane. Lisa and the couple's 14-year-old daughter were taken to area hospitals for treatment, both in critical condition at the time.

Jefferson City Police also shared Monday that the Feltrops' daughter had made "remarkable progress," and is now listed in stable condition.

"She has made tremendous improvements over the last 48 hours and is expected to continue to improve," according to a JCPD news release.

Police determined a vehicle had been left running accidentally in the family's garage overnight and caused the house to fill with a high level of carbon monoxide.

The Feltrops' son, Kyle, is a student at Helias Catholic High School.

The Helias chapter of the Frassati fraternity, led by the Rev. Josh Duncan, planned to offer Mass and pray a holy hour on behalf of the Feltrop family Monday evening at St. Joseph Cathedral.

Helias hosted a prayer service and provided access to counselors Saturday night, and another service was held Sunday at Immaculate Conception Church.

Sandy Hentges, Helias' director of communications and admissions, told the News Tribune over the weekend she will share further details about future counseling opportunities as that information becomes available.

A GoFundMe page has been established at gofundme.com/feltrop-family-tragedy-fund to assist the Feltrop family.

As of Monday afternoon, over $26,000 had been raised since Saturday.
